This September Archaeology Scotland, will be returning to the site of the First Hampden Park to continue our excavations of the remains of this globally important site.

We are looking for local groups and individuals to get involved in the project, to help carry out archaeological excavations, explore the history and heritage of football and other sports on the south side of Glasgow and share and celebrate our shared cultural and social traditions around the beautiful game.

We have funding to cover support worker costs, travel and catering. Our staff are experienced in running outreach events and working with diverse audiences. The activities will focus on providing educational and social opportunities for participants.

Participants will have access to our Heritage Hero Award scheme, which can be used in building experience for the workplace, education or training.

To register interest in the project, or if you have any questions, please contact Kieran Manchip at k.manchip@archaeologyscotland.org.uk
